Preparing for emergencies

Dupont Fire Department hosts search-rescue day

Ground crews searched primitive woodlands, hiking trails, around bridges, water stations, along roads, creek beds and around camp activity sites, shelters and inside camp buildings. Crews would walk on and around the trails looking for clues to help find two missing Boy Scouts. (Courier staff photo by Trenton Scroggins)

The call arrived at the Dupont Firehouse late Saturday morning: two Boy Scouts lost in the woodlands of Camp Louis Ernst.

About two dozen individuals from various fire departments, EMTs, and even volunteer first responders and dog handlers, had arrived at the Dupont Firehouse early Saturday morning for a false-call training session.

The day-long program, an introductory course to search and rescues, included personnel with the Indiana Department of Homeland Security who led a classroom session to prep students for the afternoon search and rescue of the two lost Boy Scouts.

"We want people to know," said Tom Johnson, EMS Coordinator for the Dupont Fire Department, that even though we are a small-town firehouse, we are taking measures to prepare ourselves with adequate training for emergency situations.

The course begins with providing students the pool of information needed to understand the various forms and strategies of search-and-rescues across all kinds of terrain and situations.

This included grass rescues and canine unit retrievals, gathering information for accurate clue recovery and how to identify litter from real clues, how to properly search dense shrubbery, grass, or woods, how to help victims and searchers suffering from various ailments, and how to properly communicate and relay information to teammates and central command.

After the slideshow session, the faux-emergency call arrived and personnel quickly established a central command and several search teams, as the crews stormed Camp Louis Ernst along with canine units and an AirMethods helicopter.

The Madison Courier joined Team 3, and participated in the active search in the northern reaches of the camp, between State Road 7 and a small lake on the property.

"Two Boy Scouts did not report to breakfast," said Lillian Hardy, the search-and-rescue manager with the Department of Homeland Security, during the briefing. "John and Randy told their colleagues they wanted to go for a hike. Breakfast was supposed to be at 8 a.m... (Scout leaders already) did a search of the immediate area, (and) now called for help in further search."

The weather is humid, Hardy continued, around 71 degrees, and ground is saturated as storms rolled through the area in the morning. The boys became lost between two points that will be covered by the search.

Our team, lined up side-by-side, between 8 and 25 feet apart, walking straight through the thicket of the woodland, sometimes on trails but usually not. We trudged up, across, over and under the wet and muddied brush, through spiderweb after spiderweb, and oftentimes along steep creek beds, searching for any clues to

Hardee's returning to Madison hilltop

A fast-food franchise once a fixture on Madison's hilltop is about to return, but in a new location.

A Hardee's restaurant is under construction at 330 Clifty Drive at the former site of Gatti's. It is hiring now for an expected opening in September.

StarCorp LLC of Phoenix, Arizona, is the franchisee, owning and operating this and other Hardee's restaurants, as well as Carl's Jr. restaurants.

Laura Vandevier, marketing director at StarCorp LLC, confirmed that it has the franchise.

Potential employees can apply for jobs at starcorp.com, she said.

Madison real estate agent Jim Pruett, the listing agent for the property, said it sold for $335,000. It is assessed on the county tax rolls for $292,000.

The new owner of the property listed in county records is SC-H Madison 1261 LLC, which is based in Frisco, Texas.

There formerly was a Hardee's in Madison on Michigan Road just south of Clifty Drive. After it closed, the building sat for years before being demolished.

The new restaurant will be a traditional Hardee's, Vandevier said. The chain has Mexican food at some of its locations, along with the traditional Hardee's biscuits, burgers and other foods.

A tree fell on Milton Hill late Sunday because of the satured ground. Traffic in one lane was blocked until crews could remove the debris. (Submitted photo)

Break in rain, thunderstorms could arrive midweek

Showers and thunderstorms continued sporadically through the weekend and into the first of this week, but without significant damage reported. Some weekend events either were canceled, postponed or rescheduled.

By Wednesday evening this week, the chance of showers and thunderstorms is reduced to 10 percent and Thursday is expected to be mostly sunny with temperaures pushing 80. Friday is forecast to be a repeat of Thursday.

The possibility of more rain and storms returns Saturday but only at a 30 percent chance and reducing to 20 percent by Sunday.

Indiana boosts security on new driver's licenses, IDs

Indiana

BEECH GROVE — Indiana is redesigning its driver's licenses and ID cards with improved security features aimed at protecting identities. The new design includes a laser-engraved photo in black and white and the birth date is now raised and tactile to ensure authenticity. "I think that'll be the most noticeable feature, ..." said Peter Lacy, the commissioner of the Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles. Another noticeable change is the circular window at the bottom right corner of the card that features a sheer photo of the cardholder. The image shows on both sides of the card in either a gold or clear background depending on the angle at which it is held. Special inks will also help authenticate cards. When cards are placed under ultraviolet light, the Indiana seal with the torch and stars will show up. "We take the security of those cards very seriously and want to make sure we're doing everything we can to protect your identity," Lacy said. The bureau said people whose cards expire soon can get one of the new cards. All Indiana BMV branches are expected to offer the new cards by mid-July. The goal is for everyone to have the new cards by 2026.

Jobless rate remains steady at 3.6% in May

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana's unemployment rate has remained steady in May from April. The Indiana Department of Workforce Development said Friday that the rate stood at 3.6 percent. The state's unemployment rate matched the national rate as well for the month — the second-consecutive month that the rate has remained flat and has been the same as the national rate. Indiana's labor force had a net increase of nearly 10,700 over the previous month, resulting in about 2,300 less unemployed residents no longer seeking employment and a decrease of 8,365 in residents employed. The state's total labor force is about 3.4 million.

Madison, Henry may opt to share regional jail

ANDERSON — Officials from Madison and Henry counties are considering the possibility of opening a regional jail that they would share. County council members from both are expected to meet soon to discuss the process for what could be combined 800-bed facility. State Rep. Thomas Saunders of New Castle said the facility would be the first of its kind in Indiana. Sheriffs from both counties say they aren't opposed to a shared jail, but have questions about additional transportation costs and whether they would also need buildings in New Castle and Anderson to hold prisoners. Henry County Sheriff Richard McCorkle said the county needs to move quickly on finding more jail space as he must now send 50 inmates to other counties.

Deadline June 30 for Scholars

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indiana Commission for Higher Education reminds seventh and eighth grade students and their parents that the June 30 deadline for the 21st Century Scholars program is approaching. The 21st Century Scholars is a statewide financial aid program that provides up to four years of undergraduate tuition and fees for eligible low-income students at Indiana colleges and universities. To qualify, students must apply during their seventh or eighth grade year. Most students who qualify for the federal free and reduced lunch guidelines will qualify for the program. While in high school, 21st Century Scholars are expected to earn at least a 2.5 grade-point average on a 4.0 scale, remain drug- and alcohol-free and complete a series of college-preparation activities. Applications are available at www.Scholars.in.gov/enroll.

Possible tornado damages buildings

SOUTH BEND — Authorities say severe weather that moved through Indiana Sunday spawned a possible tornado in South Bend that damaged buildings and knocked down trees and power lines. The National Weather Service received reports of a possible tornado as part of the storms but didn't immediately confirm a tornado. No injuries were reported. A building housing a preschool and daycare facility in South Bend was among those damaged as hundreds in the area were left without power.

Evansville educator to lead teachers union

INDIANAPOLIS — An educator from Evansville is set to take over leadership of Indiana's largest teachers union. Keith Gambill has been the Indiana State Teachers Association's vice president for six years and will become president in August. He was elected this spring to replace Teresa Meredith, a Shelbyville kindergarten teacher who has reached her six-year term limit. Gambill, who has been a middle school music and drama teacher for more than 25 years, said he intends to highlight the need for better school funding, improving the professionalism of teachers and also boosting pay for teachers, bus drivers, custodians and others who work in schools.

Former teacher cites First Amendment in suit

BROWNSBURG — A former Brownsburg Community School Corp. teacher who lost his job after citing religious reasons for disagreeing with a policy compelling teachers to call transgender students by their preferred names rather than birth names has sued the district. The federal lawsuit filed claims the school corporation and its administrators violated John Kluge's First Amendment right to freedom of speech and free exercise of religion, among others. The lawsuit seeks full back-pay and the value of benefits as well as compensatory and punitive damages. The school corporation accepted Kluge's resignation as a high school orchestra teacher one year ago despite his attempt to rescind the resignation.

Dayton drug crackdown nets indictments

DAYTON — Authorities say more than 20 people were indicted after a six-month investigation into drug trafficking in Dayton as authorities seized fentanyl, meth, cocaine and more drugs and firearms as part of the crackdown. The Northern Kentucky Drug Strike Force began the operation — called Operation River Sweep — in January. The strike force is made up of narcotics officers from the region. Dayton Police Chief David Halfhill said the community doesn't have major drug dealers. He said the users he does see often travel to Covington or Cincinnati for drugs and sell among themselves.

Boy, 15, charged with killing 7-year-old

ELIZABETHTOWN — Hardin County Sheriff John Ward said a 15-year-old boy has been charged with murder in the death of a 7-year-old family member. Officers responded to a call Thursday and took the injured boy to a hospital, where he was dead. Ward didn't provide details about what happened or how the younger child died and neither juvenile was identified. However, Ward confirmed that the children were "immediate family" but didn't specify their relationship. The teen was taken to a juvenile detention center.

Bourbon barrel recovery underway after storm

OWENSBORO — A distillery said efforts are underway to recover thousands of barrels of bourbon at a massive storage warehouse that partly collapsed during a thunderstorm. O.Z. Tyler Distillery in Owensboro said a section of the warehouse has been "successfully deconstructed" and the painstaking process of recovering barrels is moving ahead as part of an overall plan to eventually take down the entire building, called a rickhouse. Distillery officials said the warehouse cannot be salvaged. The deconstruction plan calls for a "controlled collapse" of the entire warehouse at some point. No one was injured when part of the rickhouse collapsed early last Monday where 19,400 barrels were aging, including about 4,500 barrels in the storm-damaged section. The distillery said "minimal leakage" of bourbon has been reported.

Lexington police launch unsolved case website

LEXINGTON — Lexington Police Department has launched a website to seek the public's help in identifying suspects in unsolved cases. The site, www.lexidme.com, has surveillance images of people suspected of criminal activity whom police haven't been able to identify. Chief Lawrence Weathers said the site allows the public to see some photographic evidence in cases and submit tips directly to detectives. A majority of the cases on the site will be shoplifting and other thefts, which are the most common criminal activity in Lexington. Police will update the site frequently and will continue to highlight significant or noteworthy cases on social media.

Two-vehicle crash kills 4

WHEATCROFT — Police are investigating a crash that killed four people in western Kentucky. State Police in Madisonville said in a news release the accident occurred Saturday when a car driven by Eduardo Lopez of Madisonville hydroplaned on water and slid into the oncoming lane and collided with a pickup truck on Kentucky Route 109 in Wheatcroft. Lopez and three passengers in the car, Jorge Chavez, Miguel Brico, and Christina Chavez, all of Madisonville, were dead at the scene. The passengers' ages weren't immediately known. The driver and passenger in the pickup were taken to a Madisonville hospital for injuries that were not life-threatening.

No charges in assault of anti-abortion activist

LOUISVILLE — A grand jury has declined to indict a Louisville woman accused of attacking an 82-year-old anti-abortion protester while leaving a women's clinic. Court records show a grand jury decided against an assault charge on Thursday for Janaya Alyce Gregory, 32, who is accused of knocking Donna Durning down outside Kentucky's only abortion clinic in April. The longtime anti-abortion activist was hospitalized with a broken femur and cut to her head. The Courier Journal reported that Durning said she was offering Gregory a card for a crisis pregnancy center when Gregory "charged" at her, bumping her to the ground. Crisis pregnancy centers generally try to persuade women against having abortions.

$20 to $25 million jail expansion

Johnson County Council OKs income tax hike for Oct. 1

By MAGEN KRITSCH
Daily Journal of Johnson County

Workers who live in the county will have more money taken out of their paychecks starting this fall now that the county has passed an income tax to generate money to pay for a multi-million-dollar jail expansion.

The Johnson County Council gave the final OK for an income tax increase to pay for a $20 to $25 million jail expansion that would add 250 beds on the sheriff's office campus in Franklin.

The council voted 7-0 to pass the tax on Friday, after two members of the public opposed the tax and one member of the public spoke in support of it.

The increase will bring the county's income tax rate to 1.2 percent on Oct. 1, when the tax begins. Johnson County residents who work currently pay a 1 percent income tax.

Residents who receive Social Security income would not see an increase, because that income is exempt from the local income tax.

A person who makes $75,000 annually will pay about $150 more per year, according to estimates provided by Rob Henderson, a county council member.

All county residents with an income subjected to the income tax will pay the increased rate. If you work in Johnson County but live in another county, the income tax rate you pay is based on your county of principal residence as of Jan. 1 of each year.

The increase is expected to bring in about $9 million annually, which will pay for the jail expansion that is expected to cost between $20 and $25 million dollars, according to the latest estimate. The expansion is in the beginning stages of planning, so an exact cost is not known, although the estimate has gradually grown as officials have begun the process of planning the expansion.

The current jail is chronically overcrowded and the state has ordered the county to fix the issue, which is why multiple council members said they needed to pass the tax.

Johnson County has the lowest income tax in the region, even with the tax increase, and the county is at the point that they must collect the tax to solve the issue, Henderson said.

"There is not a soul in this room that wants this tax to go through. But we do not have the luxury of not meeting mandates, not meeting minimum requirements. We have not met minimum requirements for years. This is us catching up," he said.

Not passing the tax would be irresponsible, given that the jail is chronically overcrowded, which also puts jail workers at risk, said Jonathan Myers, a council member.

Commissioner Kevin Walls formed a committee of county and law enforcement officials to study dozens of options on how to fix the overcrowded jail, at the direction of the state.

A jail feasibility study released this spring detailed the other options, which included housing inmates elsewhere and creating a regional jail. These other options were too costly and logistically not feasible, county officials have said.

The last jail expansion was in 2001.

The 2001 expansion was a $9.5 million project that increased the capacity to more than 300 beds from 104. The work was the result of a settlement that was reached after the county was sued by the Indiana Civil Liberties Union in 1997 alleging poor conditions at the jail.

By 2005, county officials were already exploring a more permanent solution to ongoing overcrowding. But voters rejected a property tax increase in 2010 to pay for a 400-bed expansion that would have cost about $23 million.

Now, the county must address the issue or risk further government involvement, council member James Ison said.

"If we don't do it on our own, federal courts will tell us how to do it and that will be quite a bit more expensive than the option we have chosen," Ison said.

The county was under deadline to get a tax passed; the first reading of the tax was early last week. Details of the tax were unveiled in a county council meeting in early April.

State law changes on July 1, and will limit what portion of the new tax revenue can be spent on jail operations. Approving the tax now under the current law gives the county greater flexibility in setting aside the right amount of the tax to pay for the day-to-day expenses once the expansion opens.

In future years, the money could be used for other correctional facilities, such as community corrections. The tax will be in effect for 20 years, but the plan is for the rate to drop to .1 percent in 2023 once the debt is paid off, although the current county council cannot make such stipulations for the money, according to the Department of Local Government Finance.

Two men spoke against the tax increase during the public meeting. The tax increase is not popular, and citizens do not appreciate being taxed further and the tax likely would not pass a popular vote, Damian Stanziano said.

Richard Riley asked council members if they had tried bail reform before a jail expansion.

Franklin resident Jim Curry spoke in favor of the tax as a measure to meet mandates, which require that jail inmates, some of whom have not been convicted of a crime, be safe and comfortable in a jail that is not overcrowded.

Johnson County workers are likely facing an additional income tax later this year, as the county council is also considering income taxes to help pay for about $110 million dollars in road and bridge work, mostly in preparation for increased traffic after Interstate 69 is built through the county.

Indiana State University board OKs 1.65% tuition hike, also approves $40 per semester health, wellness fee

By SUE LOUGHLIN
(Terre Haute) Tribune-Star

The Indiana State University Board of Trustees on Friday approved a 1.65 percent tuition increase for each of the next two years as well as a $40 per semester health and wellness fee, which takes effect in 2020-21.

The tuition increases were below the initial proposal of 1.9 percent, and the health/wellness fee was less than the $75 per semester fee the Student Government Association had recommended.

ISU President Deborah Curtis said the intent is to keep an ISU education affordable to students while maintaining academic quality. Also, the Indiana Commission for Higher Education had established a nonbinding target of no more than a 1.65 percent increase in tuition/mandatory fees for state institutions.

"We wanted to be responsible not only to their [the commission's] commitment to keeping costs affordable, but also to take a look at our commitment to our students," Curtis said.

The $40 per semester health and wellness fee will enable the university to address the greatest needs by funding more personnel at the Student Counseling Center, including counselors and case managers, "to be able to take down that wait time for students to receive services," she said.

It also will be used to expand wellness initiatives.

The health and wellness fee was recommended by the Student Government Association after a favorable student referendum in March. Officials say there has been a "dramatic spike" in the demand for mental health services over the past 10 years not only at ISU, but on college campuses across the country.

Madison Longyear, the new Student Government Association president, said after the meeting, "We're really excited about all the opportunity it will bring our students and the resources it will provide for them. We would have loved to see a $75 fee, but we'll still be able to do so much with $40."

Stephen Lamb, last year's SGA president who has graduated, was a strong advocate for the health/wellness fee as a way to help address growing mental health needs on campus. He attended Friday's trustee meeting.

"I understand the constraints that the Indiana Commission for Higher Education's so-called nonbinding tuition increase [recommendation] puts on public institutions," Lamb said in an interview. "I know it's there for a good reason, to make sure that tuition and fees aren't raised constantly."

While SGA advocated for the $75 fee, "Having a $40 per semester health and wellness fee is still a win in my mind because it's better than what we had," Lamb said. "It will provide additional revenue that will go toward essential counseling center services. ... It's a win for students who are most in need of this kind of health care."

ISU Trustee chairman Ed Pease said ISU has had a strong partnership with the Commission for Higher Education in recent years, and the Commission "has worked hard for our interests."

ISU leadership did factor in the commission's nonbinding targets in its own recommendation.

ISU understands the commission's concerns about keeping tuition and fees affordable for students, Pease said. "I applaud Dr. Curtis and the administration for responding to that. ... You've done a terrific job under challenging circumstances."

According to ISU, tuition for an in-state, full-time undergraduate student will increase to $4,518 a semester in 2019-20, a $73 uptick per semester over last year. The cost for the same student in 2020-21 is $4,593 per semester.

The fee for the Student Recreation Center remains unchanged at $100 per semester.

For 2020-21, when the tuition increase, Student Recreation Center fee and health/wellness fee are combined, the overall increase in tuition/mandatory fees is 2.49 percent.

Diann McKee, senior vice president for finance and administration, noted that when tuition and the mandatory Student Recreation Center fee are considered together for 2019-20, the overall increase is actually 1.61 percent — slightly below the commission target.

Curtis told trustees ISU will review the health and wellness fee in the next biennium to determine whether changes are needed.

Student decline cuts into ISU budget plan

By SUE LOUGHLIN
(Terre Haute) Tribune-Star

Indiana State University's enrollment decline means less tuition revenue and a reduced general fund budget for 2019-20.

The ISU 2019-20 general fund budget approved Friday by the board of trustees is nearly $188.9 million, down from $195.3 million in 2018-19.

Despite a tuition increase and higher state appropriation, student numbers — and tuition revenue — are expected to decline this fall, when headcount is projected at 11,892 — a figure that does not include high school students taking College Challenge, or dual credit, courses.

Earlier this year, officials projected an enrollment decline of about 4 percent.

To meet priorities and commitments, ISU had to reallocate $7.9 million to fund increases in compensation and student scholarships and maintain a balanced budget. Reallocation means funds are cut from some areas in order to fund others.

"That included eliminating 26 vacant staff positions," said Diann McKee, senior vice president for finance and administration. "No employee in an active position was harmed in any way." Those vacant positions were "all across the board and not in any one particular area."

The university also made cuts in various supply and expense lines and it reduced budgeted reserves, she said. For example, in 2018-19, ISU set aside about $5.4 million in student tuition revenue reserves to absorb any potential revenue shortfalls; for 2019-20, that amount has been reduced by about $1.4 million to $4 million.

"We went through an internal process of identifying expenditures that we could reduce," McKee said.

Student tuition represents 51.8 percent of the total general fund revenues, compared to 43.7 percent from state support.

Legal marijuana is becoming a growing danger to dogs

By LAURA KLIVANS
KQED/NPR/Kaiser Health News

It all started on a Tuesday night, when I came home from work to an unmistakable absence. My brown-and-white pitbull mix, Maizey, wasn't at the top of the stairs to greet me. Instead, she was in her bed, shaky and confused.

When I tried to get her up, she stumbled, nearly falling over while standing still. Walking to the vet, she leaped like a puppy chasing imaginary balls.

Later, at the 24-hour veterinary clinic in San Francisco's Mission District, the staff ran tests and determined Maizey was in no immediate danger.

Instead, they wagered a guess that Maizey was simply high. On marijuana.

"Dogs will get into anything and everything," said veterinarian Dorrie Black of the San Francisco-based veterinary clinic Animal Internal Medicine and Specialty Services.

Thirty-three states and the District of Columbia now have legalized pot in some form. And since Colorado ushered in recreational marijuana in 2014, nine more states and D.C. have followed. As weed has become easier for people to get, it has also become a hazard for dogs.

Black said dogs ingest marijuana by eating the remainder of a joint, or getting into someone's edible marijuana, either at home, on the street or in parks.

Another unsavory source in San Francisco — and other cities with high numbers of people living on the streets — is human feces tainted with marijuana. This is, in fact, what we think happened to Maizey. She had spent quite a bit of time in the park bushes the morning she got stoned.

"Dogs love that [poop] scent; to them, it's perfume," said Black.

Black and other veterinarians see this becoming more common in the Bay Area, as the homeless population grows.

Veterinarian Benjamin Otten of allCREATURES veterinary clinic in El Cerrito, California, said he looks for these telltale symptoms when identifying "marijuana toxicity" in a dog:

- Wobbly movements, like a person who is drunk
- Dribbling urine
- A dazed or glazed look in their eyes
- Low temperature
- Nervousness

Dogs exhibit these symptoms because THC — the psychoactive element of marijuana — is poisonous to them. Despite that, none of the vets interviewed for this story had seen an animal die from marijuana toxicity.

"There's nothing about that actual drug itself that will kill them," Black said. "It doesn't cause any organ failure. It doesn't cause liver failure, renal failure."

What can happen, Black said, is that the drug can sedate a dog so fully that it will inhale its own vomit, which can be lethal. For that reason, Black cautions pet owners to play it safe.

A high Maizey Klivans, home after getting checked out by the vet. Her human (the author) found her in this infrequently occupied area of the apartment … just … mellowing out. (Photos by Laura Klivans/KQED)

"If you do not know the quantity that they got into, I'm always going to recommend that you go to your vet," she said.

A Colorado study found that two dogs who'd ingested chocolate baked goods made with marijuana-infused butter had died, but it's unclear if this was from the marijuana, the chocolate or the combination of those components. Butter and dark chocolate, common ingredients in edible marijuana products, can be highly toxic to dogs.

Cannabidiol, or CBD, on the other hand, is marketed to pet owners for a variety of pet ailments. But the research is incomplete about its efficacy for treating things like animal anxiety and seizures, and veterinarians are not allowed to recommend CBD to patients (although a bill making its way through California's Senate could change that).

To reduce marijuana's effects on a dog, Black said, there are a few options: Veterinarians can induce vomiting, pump a dog's stomach or give the dog activated charcoal, which will help remove the marijuana from the dog's system.

On average, it typically takes about 24 hours for a dog to return to normal — but it varies depending on the strength and amount of marijuana the dog has eaten.

Otten, who formerly worked as an emergency vet, joked about what he used to tell pet owners: "We're gonna take your dog in, we're gonna put him in a quiet room. We're gonna play some Led Zeppelin for him and give him some Doritos, and you can pick him up in the morning."

While my own vet bill put us out $300, veterinarian John de Jong, president of the American Veterinary Medical Association, said interventions like bloodwork and IV fluids could cost up to $1,000.

It seems to be rarer for cats to ingest marijuana. Black said she has seen only one case involving a cat in her 17 years in emergency veterinary medicine.

While de Jong also has not seen any high cats come through his practice, he said, some cats do like to chew on plants, which could be an issue if someone is growing marijuana at home.

De Jong, who is based in Massachusetts, is seeing more incidences of marijuana toxicity. Marijuana is legal for medical and recreational purposes in Massachusetts.

"In those states that have legalized marijuana, we are seeing an increased incidence of marijuana toxicity in pets, especially in dogs," he said.

Recreational marijuana is legal in 10 states and the District of Columbia, and many more states allow medical marijuana.

Calls to the ASPCA's Animal Poison Control Center about dogs eating weed have increased sevenfold since last year, and calls to the Pet Poison Helpline have quadrupled in the past five years. A 2012 study conducted in Colorado found a significant correlation between the number of medical marijuana licenses and marijuana toxicosis cases in dogs.

In California, both Black and Otten said the changes to marijuana's legality have not significantly increased the number of visits they get from blitzed dogs and their owners. Black said she sees up to three affected dogs a week in the summer.

What Black and Otten said has changed, however, is the potency of the drugs the dogs are consuming.

Black said that at the start of her career in emergency veterinary medicine, marijuana toxicity consisted of a dog eating the end of a joint with fairly low amounts of THC. But, she said, "we got heavier and heavier toxicities over time because of medical grade marijuana and because of edibles."

As for Maizey, she was just fine a few days after her foray into canine cannabis. Though she once seemed interested in imaginary balls, now she has settled back into chasing real ones.

the whereabouts of the missing boys. And, after less than an hour of searching, the team uncovered a line of clues pointing to the perceived location of the boys, marking each of the clues on a coordinate map and communicating those locations to central command.

After collecting the clues, two water bottles, a knife sharpener, a bag of hand-warmers — and freshly broken branches — the team was called back to central command, which had rearranged the search grid based on the clues found, sending one team north of ours to search for the missing boys.

Just under the hour mark of the executed search, the two boys had been rescued just north of our gridded area and our line of clues.

Crews joined together at central command after the search for a canine demonstration in which the Department of Homeland Security showed the differences between air-scent and specific-scent canines, as well as search-recovery-barkers, search-recovery-trainer-retrievers, and GPS traceable sitting dogs — all various strategies for recovering living and deceased victims.

During the debriefing back at the Dupont Fire Department, local emergency personnel throughout the Courierarea, stressed the need for volunteers in this area of work and across the board.

Johnson said the departments are always in need of help and anyone interested in helping may do so. He stressed the need for volunteers for help around the departments and on search-and-rescue teams, adding that the departments are willing to help anyone secure a Public Safety Identification Number, the first requirement for receiving certification for this type of work.

Department of Homeland Security Site Administrator Patrick Brown said, "dog training...is free...at the search-and-rescue training center — one at Camp Atterbury and the other at (Indiana Sheriffs' Youth Ranch, 5325 N. State Road 59, Brazil, Indiana 47834).

Training is also free for humans, he said.

"Trainers just have to meet a certain criteria and then it's free to be trained. Most trained K9s are volunteer based, not government- or city-based, (and this includes) all different breeds," Brown added. "We just had a beagle come through for beginner and intermediate training."

For those interested in beginning the process for training to help with local emergency response teams or as independent responders, Public Safety Identification Numbers (PSI) may be acquired by going to http://www.in.gov/dhs/3207.htm

Once an ID number has been acquired, further information on human and K9 training is available through The Department of Homeland Security at (812) 526-0013 or by going to the department's website at — https://acadisportal.in.gov/AcadisViewer/Login.aspx — where those with a PSI may login and access the main training calendar and apply for courses.

The next ground search-and-rescue introductory course will be at The Department of Homeland Security's camp in Brazil, Indiana, on August 24-25, while introductory and intermediate K-9 unit retrieval courses will be throughout June and early July.

For more information on the courses and how to apply for training or to have your dog trained, call or email The Department of Homeland Security Division of Training at (812) 526-0013 and lhardy@dhs.in.gov, or contact Dupont Fire Department EMS Coordinator Tom Johnson at (812) 801-5574, or contact a representative with your local fire department.

Mother Nature can't ruin Madison's day in the sun

By ROB LAFARY
Courier Staff Writer
sports@madisoncourier.com

Mother Nature did its best to ruin a unique baseball experience in the city of Madison this past weekend but a complete team effort to get Gary O'Neal Field ready to play paired with just enough dry weather successfully allowed all three games of the Indiana High School Baseball Coaches Association North/South All-Star Series to go the distance on Saturday and Sunday.

Outside of a two-hour delay on the start time of game one, the series, hosted by Madison for the first time ever, went off without a hitch.

The Madison baseball coaching staff and field maintenance crews prepped the field as early as 6:30 a.m. each day and the field provided an immaculate setting for some of the state's best senior talents to showcase their abilities. The result was a well-attended two days of games that followed Wednesday's underclassmen showcase and Friday afternoon's North/South Home Run Derby.

"With the rain all week long and us having to move the junior showcase here from Hanover College, it's just amazing that we got everything in," Madison head baseball coach Tim Armstrong said. "The field got beat up a little bit in some spots but overall we got the three games in this weekend and that's great. Our whole crew worked hard and we had everybody step in. Even both teams helped us with the tarp."

The games themselves lived up to the expectations of an all-star series with the North squad digging back from a 1-0 hole to win the final two games of the weekend and capture the series 2-1 over the South.

The North led 1-0 in the series opener on Saturday afternoon but the South responded with two runs in the bottom of the third inning and never trailed the rest of the way. The South added three more runs in the fourth and a pair of runs in the bottom of the fifth to increase the lead to 7-1 before the North attempted a comeback late.

After two scoreless innings, the North pushed a run across in the top of the eighth and followed with a run in the ninth but were unable to advance any further runners, allowing the South to slam the door shut on game one for the win.

Seven different players each recorded a lone hit for the South in the victory and was led by Jeffersonville's Blayden McMahel who was just a day removed from his 12 home runs to capture the Home Run Derby championship. McMahel was 1-for-3 with two RBIs while Brian Keeney (Roncalli), Jack Walker (New Palestine), Brodey Heaton (Castle) and Denton Shepler (Union County) each drove in a run. Columbus East's Julian Greenwell scored two runs.

Penn's Brock Boynton and Kyle Schmack from South Central (Union Mills) each went 2-for-3 with two runs scored and a double. Northwood's Matt Dutkowski had an RBI.

Whiteland's Luke Helton started the game for the South and picked up the win. Helton threw two and one-third innings, allowing an earned run on four hits. He struck out two and walked one. Wyatt Geesaman of Jay County was dealt the loss in a relief appearance. Geesaman allowed two earned runs on one hit in an inning's work while striking out two and walking two.

Defending champ U.S. to face Spain

By ANNE M. PETERSON
AP Sports Writer

REIMS, France — Spain coach Jorge Vilda says part of the challenge in facing the United States is making sure his players aren't intimidated by the defending Women's World Cup champions.

Spain faces the top-ranked U.S. team Monday in Reims, marking the first time La Roja will appear in the knockout round at the World Cup.

"We need to insure that it doesn't get in our head. We've had the right level of competition, and we hope that tomorrow that we can put our best foot forward," Vilda said Sunday through a translator. "When the girls look at the players in front of them they are not going to see stars, they are going to see a team like any other. They are a good team, but we are also a team that has been known to be up to scratch and shown what we can do on the pitch."

It's going to be hard not to see those stars when facing a front line that includes Alex Morgan, Megan Rapinoe and Tobin Heath.

The United States skated through its group with a stage record 18 goals. And the team didn't concede a goal in the group for the first time at a World Cup.

The three-time World Cup winners are brimming with confidence.

"I think this is the best team we've had," Ali Krieger said. "We're so confident right now. We're so motivated to want to win and succeed."

The two teams met in January in Alicante, part of a European trip for the United States. Christen Press scored the lone goal in a 1-0 victory and the Americans rebounded from a 3-1 loss to France in Le Havre a few days before.

The match may have been a confidence boost for No. 13 Spain, because it was able to hang with the world's top-ranked team.

Coach Jill Ellis said she believed that friendly was critical to the Americans' preparation, but both teams have since evolved.

"I actually pushed for that game because I think it was important for us. You have to take the approach that if it's a method where you're learning, you're growing and you're getting better, you can't worry about what your opponent takes away from a game," she said.

Ellis said Julie Ertz and Morgan were "fine" but didn't elaborate. Ertz missed the team's final group-stage match, a 2-0 victory over Sweden, because of a hip contusion. Morgan did not play in the second half because of a couple of hard collisions in the first.

Spain, playing in its second World Cup but making its first appearance in the knockout round, finished second to Germany in its group to draw the United States.

Spain has been on the rise since Vilda took over following the 2015 World Cup. The team won the 2017 Algarve Cup and last year won the Cyprus Cup, while also finishing in the final eight of the UEFA Women's Euro.

Defender Irene Paredes was asked if Spain's players believe they have a chance.

"That's pretty basic," she said. "That's the first thing you have to achieve, that we ourselves think that we can win, right?"

The winner Monday will play fourth-ranked France, which defeated Brazil 2-1 on Sunday.

CANADA-SWEDEN

Canada heads into its knockout round match against Sweden in Paris with captain Christine Sinclair sitting at 182 career goals, just two away from matching the international record set by former U.S. forward Abby Wambach. Sinclair is the second player to score in five straight World Cups, joining Brazil's Marta.

Eight of Sinclair's goals have come against Sweden.

Fifth-ranked Canada has bronze medals in the last two Olympics, but fell to England in the quarterfinals at the 2015 World Cup on home soil. The Canadians are 4-3-3 in their last 10 matches against Sweden, with the most recent meeting at the Algarve Cup, when Canada prevailed on penalties after a scoreless draw.

The winner will face No. 2 Germany in a quarterfinal match Saturday in Rennes.

Thurston gives up 2ER

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Former Madison Cub Ryan Thurston was roughed up in a brief stint in the Gary SouthShore RailCats' 4-3 loss at St. Paul on Saturday.

Thurston, a left-handed pitcher, had allowed only three runs coming into the game but gave up two earned runs on two hits in two-thirds of an inning with a strikeout. Thurston entered the game in the eighth inning with Gary up 3-1. St. Paul scored the game-winner in the bottom of the ninth.

The outing raised Thurston's ERA to 2.70 on the season. He has allowed five earned runs on 10 hits in 13 and two-thirds innings this season with 13 strikeouts and seven walks. He does not have a decision at Gary but is 1-0 overall on the season including a stint with Chicago.

high, pitched an inning and two-thirds in the game one win, striking out one and walking one without allowing a hit or a run.

Offensive woes quickly went away for the North in game two as it responded in a big way to pick up a 16-3 win to even the series.

The South led 2-1 after the first inning but the North offense finally found consistent offense and scored in four consecutive innings. The North scored three runs in the bottom of the third followed by a run in the fourth, two runs in the fifth and exploding for five runs in the bottom of the sixth.

A run came across for the South in the top of the seventh but the North responded in its final at-bat with four runs in the bottom of the eighth before putting the game away in the ninth.

Twelve hits produced the 16 runs for the North with Schmack going a perfect 3-for-3 with a double and four RBIs and Logansport's Tucker Platt went 2-for-3 with an RBI. McCutcheon's Connor Ayres drove in three runs while Angel DiFederico of New Haven and Fort Wayne Dwenger's Charlie Howe each drove in a pair.

The South was led by Edgewood's Ethan Vecrumba, who hit a home run and was 1-for-3 with two RBIs.

Pitching in relief, Crown Point's Ryan Fender got the win after pitching two innings of no-hit baseball including four strikeouts against zero walks. Dylan Steele came on for the South in the third and received the loss. Steele allowed four earned runs through one and one-thirds of an inning, giving up two hits, striking out two and walking four.

The North's offense stayed hot on Sunday, leading from start-to-finish to claim the weekend all-star series with an 8-4 victory in game three.

An RBI single by Platt allowed the North a 1-0 advantage in the top of the first before adding two runs on a Schmack single in the top of the third. The South answered back on an RBI single by McMahel in the bottom of the third but Schmack again struck, this time blasting a two-run home run to left centerfield in the top of the fifth off of Austin's Drew Buhr to increase the lead to 5-1.

The South made things interesting in the bottom of the fifth using four hits to push across three runs to trim the deficit to 5-4 but that's when the offense finally stalled and allowed the North some insurance runs late. Boynton and Schmack each scored in the top of the seventh and the North's last run came in the top of the eighth on an RBI single by Warsaw's Liam Patton.

Schmack's weekend hot streak concluded with a 3-for-4 performance including his home run and four RBIs. He finished the three-game series going 8-for-10 with a double, a home run and eight RBIs, earning MVP honors in the series. McMahel went 2-for-3 for the South with a triple, a run and an RBI.

Reece Rodabaugh of Lewis Cass pitched a scoreless first inning for the North and picked up the win while allowing no hits. Hamilton Southeastern's Michael Dillon received the loss, allowing three earned runs on five hits through two and one-thirds of an inning while striking out two.

"Great talent here at these games and pretty neat to see a kid (Schmack) from a 1A school pick up the MVP honors," Armstrong said. "These were some really good ballgames and you're playing for a sense of pride. You're playing for your half of the state. And these are nice, young men. Very polite guys and it's been a great experience for us and them."

Armstrong noted that this may not be the last time Madison hosts the all-star series. The event hosts and the city got rave reviews from the IHSBCA throughout the weekend.

"The all-star series has never been in this part of the state before," Armstrong added. "We had always talked about hosting this thing but we partnered with Visit Madison and Hanover College to finally get this and the IHSBCA gave us the chance. After leaving today, I think we impressed the IHSBCA and at some point I think these games will be back here."

Summer of invention

Madison Jr. High youth immersion camps in 6th year

By TRENTON SCROGGINS
Special to the Courier

Camp Invention and Invention Project, weeklong camps at Madison Consolidated Junior High School, are in the sixth year of providing numerous classroom oppportunities to engage students over summer break, including activities aimed to pique student interests in science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

Camp Invention director Julie Kiefer said. "(It's guiding students toward) Cub Manufacturing and the sciences — it helps them to work together and to keep at it — not to give up."

The camps host students daily from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. A donation of $10,000 by SuperATV to the two summer camps has made attending the camps significantly more affordable, Kiefer said.

When the camps first started, Kiefer said, the proportion of boys to girls was leaning greatly toward more boys, however, there has been a push for girls to see themselves as being capable of being scientists too. Over the years, Kiefer said, the turnout has become more balanced.

A program handout said students receive a program of lessons aimed at guiding them to solve real-world problems in the new millennia, while rotating through modules inspired by this year's inductees into the National Inventors Hall of Fame, including Ken Thompson, who, with Dennis Ritchie, developed the UNIX operating system in the late 1960s and early 1970s — an operating system that has laid the foundation for the world's computing infrastructure.

Among the modules students are rotated through are "Innovation Force," where students learn the importance of collaboration, patents, and plagiarism; "Deep Sea Mystery," where student teams work together to invent island-survival tools and underwater equipment; "Farm Tech," where students learn the basics of running a business, while also using technology to maximize profits; and "DIY Orbot," where campers explore digital frequency, circuit boards, motors and gears, while reverse engineering a remote-controlled robot.

Camp Invention is intended for children going into 1st through 5th grade, while Invention Project, a more focused curriculum, is intended for children entering the 6th through 8th grades.

Xander Bauer, a 6th grader in Invention Project, explained the classroom project he and his partner, Sawyer Felts, worked on during a small business and video game designing module, "We wanted our game to promote health and wellness, so we reduced the brightness 10 percent and reduced the sound 30 percent, because people are always complaining about games (being loud and bright)."

Student campers gather around Jordan McHenry, a teacher within the Madison Consolidated Schools system, as they test the floatability of their homemade boats. Made of cardboard, duct-tape, and various other supplies, the boats each went through several tests before having small, circular, metal weights placed on each to see how much it can hold. (Courier staff photos by Connor Jacobs and Trenton Scroggins)

Their game is about survival, Bauer said, "it'll have boxes that pop up to teach you how to use certain items — It'll be a jungle survival."

Another 6th grader, Autumn Bladen, developed her own brand, "The Gucci Rolex," a brand that produces eyewear among other fashion products.

Bladen explained her name choice and how Gucci was already an established brand, her favorite, in fact, so she needed to add to or change her brand's name to avoid infringing upon trademark and copyright laws.

Their instructor, Adams Jones, a 6th grade math teacher at the junior high, said, "We've been doing (this camp) since the beginning — this is our sixth year....Video game design was just an activity that was sent with the camp material, but the kids enjoy it, obviously. ..."

As Jones said this, a student in the background shouted for clarification, "But it's not real games!"

Jones explained that the students in this year's module are making board game and video game concepts, and mini robots, like the younger campers with Camp Invention.

"Each circuit board is partially assembled, so the students still have to mess with some wires," Jones said.

And, students get to take their work home with them, where they can continue to learn, explore and develop on their own.

Xander Phillips, left, watches the teacher while he and his friends play together during a farming classroom at camp last week. During "Farm Tech," students took on a variety of projects, including the building of mini hay bale catapults meant to launch food across fences to the cattle.

Campers had the chance to create and design Orbots, which are tiny, plastic orange robots on wheels. Many were decorated with eyes, popsicle sticks and other various craft supplies.

Salvation Army's Lees say their goodbyes to Madison

By ELISABETH MOORE
Courier staff writer

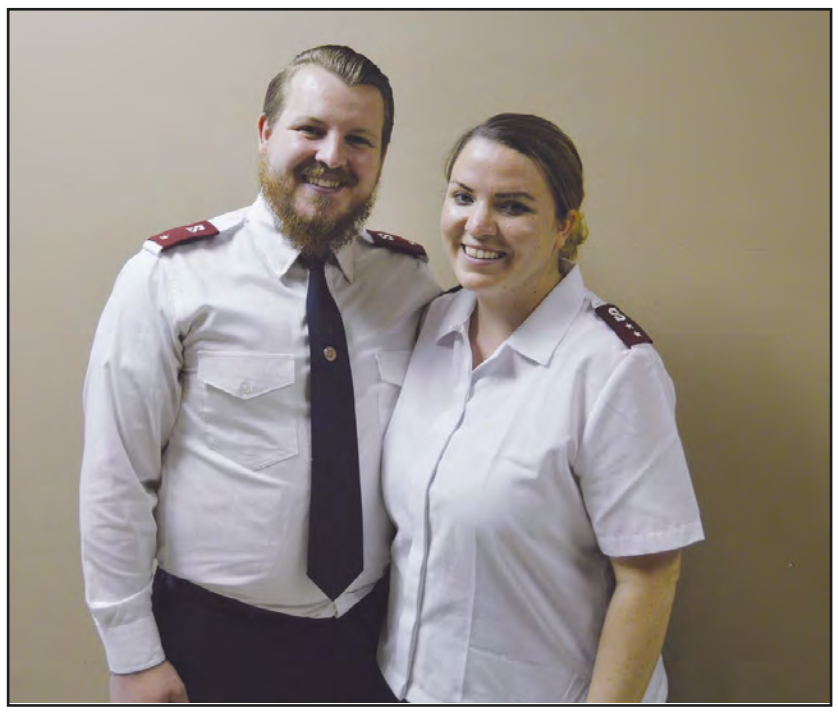
After spending four years dedicated to serving Madison and Jefferson County, Captain Brenna Lee and Lt. Vinal Lee have resigned from The Salvation Army of Madison to move to the Indianapolis-based Fountain Square Salvation Army.

When Brenna and Vinal first moved to Madison, they were newly married and were looking for different ways to help run The Salvation Army post they inherited from the previous pastor. Both Brenna and Vinal agreed that it was a perfect and diverse experience for them as newlyweds and as new partners in The Salvation Army.

"Our four years here in Madison have been the perfect experience for us, especially experiencing the ministry for the first time together," Brenna said. "It was an overwhelming transition because we were getting married and we moved here without knowing anything about Madison. But, we were welcomed into Madison almost immediately."

Throughout their experiences here in Jefferson County, Vinal said it was hard to pick any specific time that he liked the most, but he was glad to look back at all of the time they invested in the county and to see all of the people that The Salvation Army was able to help. Brenna agreed, saying that working in Jefferson County was a unique opportunity that allowed her and others to help people through Christianity at The Salvation Army.

Despite having to leave Jefferson County after working here for four years, Brenna and Vinal said they are happy with what they were able to do for the county. While they could always do more for this Salvation Army post, the Lees said they feel as if they are leaving the county better for their efforts.



Lt. Vinal Lee and Captain Brenna Lee

"I think my favorite part about working here in Jefferson County was being able to see people transform." Vinal said last week. "There's people who we worked with from our very first day in 2015 who we can see our very last day come Sunday (June 23) in 2019. Seeing that clear measure of growth and transformation, from seeing where they were at and seeing the work that we've been able to invest in them and partner with them to actually see lives impacted in a measurable way."

While Brenna and Vinal do plan on visiting their Jefferson County friends after their move to Indianapolis, along with the many unique restaurants and events that Madison has, they said that they plan to give the new pastors at The Salvation Army of Madison some time to adjust before they plan any visits.

A slideshow of Captain Brenna Lee and Lt. Vinal Lee was shown throughout the farewell party, which contained photos from their time in Madison.

The farewell party for Captain Brenna Lee and Lt. Vinal Lee was on Sunday, June 23 at The Salvation Army in Madison. After four years of working in Madison, Brenna and Vinal are moving to work at the Fountain Square Salvation Army in Indianapolis. (Courier staff photos by Connor Jacobs)

Despite not visiting for a while, the Lees had some advice for the new pastors who will take their place in Madison.

"My biggest advice is just to slow down, to soak up the Southern hospitality and just embrace Madison's beauty and quirkiness because it is literally the best place to be," Brenna said.

"Madison is surprisingly South," Vinal said. "You think Indiana and you don't think of the speed of Madison. We both moved from larger cities before we got married, so we moved at a much faster pace. When we came here, we walked really fast, we talked really fast and we did things really quickly and people were like, you just need to slow down. So that would be our advice to them, to enjoy the South while it's here."

BRIDGE

LOSE LOSERS FIRST, WIN WINNERS LATER

Michael Caine, who has won two Oscars, said, "I read books like mad, but I am careful not to let anything I read influence me."

At the bridge table, if you can read the cards like mad and are careful to use the information to influence your play, you will become an expert immediately.

What should South do in this four-heart contract after West leads the diamond queen?

In the auction, South's two-diamond rebid was New Minor Forcing, artificially announcing at least game-invitational values. When North showed three-card heart support, South went for that game.

If North-South had not been using NMF, South would have had to rebid three clubs. Then West might have led a club, hoping to give his partner a ruff. If so, South would have had to play the heart ace and another heart to avoid suffering that ruff, which would not have been clear-cut.

As it was, South saw at most three losers: two spades and one heart. He won with dummy's diamond ace and ran the heart 10. West took the trick and continued with the diamond 10. Declarer won with his king, drew trumps and played on clubs. However, when East discarded on the second round, suddenly South had to lose two spades, one heart and one club.

Declarer needed to read that the clubs could wait. He should have tried to establish a spade trick first, leading twice toward dummy's two honors. Here, he would have collected one spade, four hearts, two diamonds and three clubs.

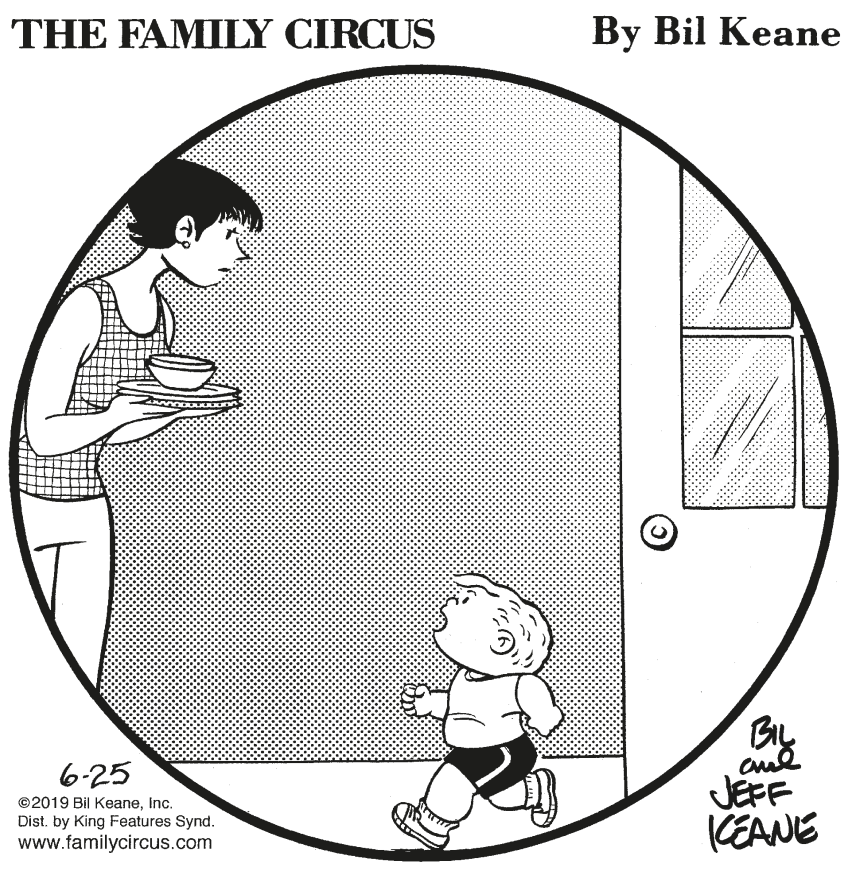
FAMILY CIRCLE



"I forget. Am I supposed to be hiding or seeking?"

Feeling obligated to see grandfather

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: My grandfather was violently abusive to his wife, and then his daughter (my mother), and then to me. He was also very racist — he punished me for having a black friend in grade school — and just generally cruel.

Now, his health is not so good, and his old age has mellowed him out considerably. He can still have temper rages if provoked enough, but most of the time he is calm.

The problem is that everyone in my family keeps urging me to spend more time with him "before he's gone." Everyone else is content with sweeping the way he treated us under the rug and brushing it off as "that's just how he is." Even my mom adores him, despite the things he did to her.

The thing is that I have no desire to see him again. I've visited before out of familial obligation, and I was uncomfortable the whole time. He's never apologized for his behavior or the way he treated us, and he still thinks everything is either his way or the highway. I don't wish him any ill will, I just don't want to see him. Am I wrong to feel this way? — Guilted Granddaughter

Dear Guilted: The answer to the question "Am I wrong to feel this way?" is always no. Feelings, in themselves, are never wrong. It is our actions that fall under the categories of right and wrong, actions such as behaving cruelly and abusively toward vulnerable people. What your grandfather did — not just across years but across generations — was wrong. And it's easier for your family to engage in collective amnesia than to acknowledge that it happened.

It sounds as though you've made peace with this traumatic history and aren't harboring any anger toward him — that you've made the decision not to see him out of love for yourself, not hatred for him. I commend you for doing all the emotional legwork it must have taken to reach that point. Hopefully, your mom will understand and meet you where you are eventually. In the meantime, know that you are not wrong.

Dear Annie: I read with interest the letter from the brother whose sister has Obsessive-Compulsive Personality Disorder. My husband has that diagnosis. He was motivated to change because, although he had no insight into his behavior, he wanted to keep our marriage intact. He had therapy with a fantastic therapist (I went with him sometimes) with no appreciable change, over two years. The therapist referred him to an excellent psychiatrist, who diagnosed him with OCPD.

The only way to treat this disorder is with medication. My husband takes an anti-depressant, not for depression but because it's an off-label treatment. And it works! It's not perfect; he still is stubborn and compulsive/rigid sometimes, but it changed the whole dynamic for the better. And he has some insight into his behavior, best of all. Our marriage has been terrific for many years now.

I realize the sister is not motivated, but perhaps all her unpleasant consequences could motivate her to go to a psychiatrist. Hope so! — Been There, Came Out the Other Side

Dear Been There: Changing the dynamic from rigid to a little more relaxed is wonderful, and I congratulate you and your husband for keeping at it and finding a good psychiatrist who really helped. Thanks for sharing your story.
